F A C U L T

A few years from now, this yearbook will have a different meaning for you. You will look at the pictures and say things like "Remember when . . . ?" When you see my picture, you'll probably remember me standing behind the cage selling you your book.

It is my hope that as your yearbook grows older, you will have only happy memories of your stay at King.

Ms. Ferreira, Principal

This has been a very important year at King. We have "a new look," "a good feeling for one another" at King this year, and that's what makes for a good-looking Martin Luther King Junior High School.

I feel privileged to have served as your vice principal this year. Because of you and the cooperation that you have given to me and to your teachers and other staff members, we were able to maintain our high standard of education.

Congratulations to you, the students here at King! I hope you have a wonderful summer.

Mr. Randolph, Vice Principal

Some people call King "A palace of sin," but I think that King, compared to any other school, is a very good school. Think of it as a conversation piece. Next time somebody asks you how you like King, say:
"Oh, it's pretty fun. The outside appearance isn't exactly fascinating, but the staff is great, they have super elective possibilities, and very good gym equipment. They'll probably think you're crazy, but what does it matter? You'll feel good inside.

Carolina Torres

“Hey, how 'bout some privacy?!”

“Now, THIS is what you call social living!”

“I told you not to get too close to the saw!”

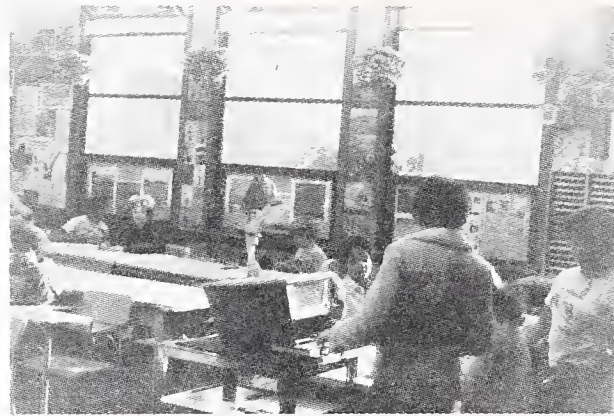

“Come fly me!”

The alien floated slowly to earth in his spacecraft as the engines whirred to a stop, dropping him gently on the King playground. As the door of his airship opened, he leaped out, ready to confront any foe who wished to challenge him. Then he stopped in amazement, for before him was a field of stone spotted with huge mountains of rock formed in simple geometric figures. Suddenly there was a loud clanging. Startled, the alien glanced around trying to determine where the noise had come from. At that moment several doors opened in the monolithic heaps of stone, and hundreds of small, strange creatures began running in and out of these doors, their faces expressionless. The alien attempted to stop a few of these weird creatures, but they rushed by; then another bell rang and the last of the creatures disappeared through the doorways. The alien, uncertain as to what to do, hesitated and then walked fearfully up to one of the doors, slowly pulled it open, and peered in. Stretching out before him to curve away out of sight was a long hallway, its walls covered with little doors. The alien went carefully up to one of the doors and pulled on the handle, but the door refused to open. The alien frowned slightly; then he pulled out a raygun and fired at the door, completely obliterating it. Out of a small compartment behind the door fell what seemed to be hundreds of small rectangular things and a brown, shapeless, paper form. The alien looked at these for a moment in puzzlement and then went on to the next door and treated it the same way. The same results. Were these storage chambers? The alien scratched his head, perplexed by this strange place.

As he continued on down the hallway, he noticed that at even intervals there were larger doors. He crept silently up to one of these and tried to see in through the many windows in the door. The glass in the windows was of a strange texture, making everything fuzzy, but the alien managed to make out a tall thin figure gesturing with what had to be hands, as they were positioned at the end of his/her/its arms, although they had many fewer fingers than the alien's. The alien, taking this for a war dance, threw open the door and leapt in, waving his sword above his head and shaking his raygun in a menacing gesture. Then he stopped and stood there in astonishment as the room erupted with screams, and the small creatures that filled the room started diving out windows and scrambling for the doors. Meanwhile the figure at the front fainted and fell backwards, hitting the floor with a dull thud. The alien walked over to it, looking into its upturned face (an extremely ugly one by alien standards). At that moment the creature woke up, gave one final scream, and then fainted again. The alien jumped three feet in the air and at least seven backwards, propelling himself out the door altogether. He stared at the thing on the floor, surprised by its reaction. Then he raced out of the building and down to his spaceship. The door of the spaceship opened, and he mounted the stairs to the entrance with relief. There he turned around and looked back over the meadow of rock to the strange piles of stone. Then, shaking his head, he walked back into his aircraft and flew off into space. Was it a world gone mad?

"Hey, man!"

Evil Mr. Hyde

"Ah, now I've got it!"

"Watch the book!"

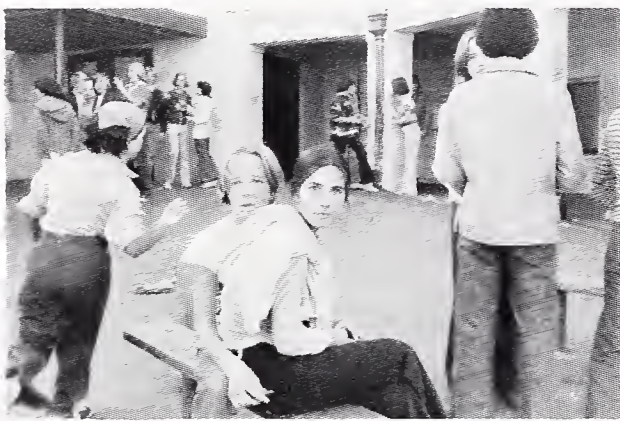

"An apple a day keeps the doctor away!"

"Darling! It's so nice to see you again!"

"Stop, thief!"

"Go away! We're busy!"

"Give your cold to Contac!"

"Is THIS supposed to be a doughnut?!"

"Humph!"

"Don't you think your sarong's a little short?!"

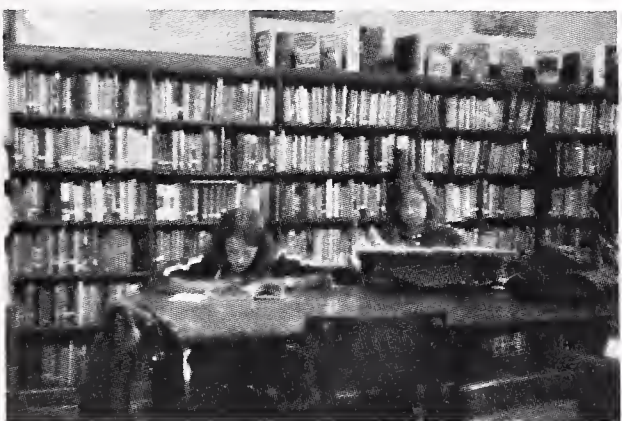

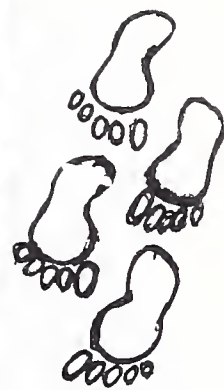

"And furthermore . . . "

"Hey, Steve, that's the 176th seagull I've seen today!"

"Ah! This is the life!"

"See Spot run. See Sally ..."

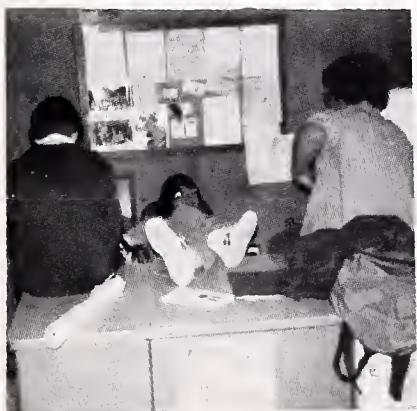

"Ta dah!"

"Look, I'm doing the splits!"

"Smile, Judith! They're taking our picture!"

"Now, if you don't do your job, you're fired!"

"So there!"

"And now I'd like you to meet my friend, the tree!"

"Join the King Crowd!"

Happy noises I hear.

“What is this?” I ask.

“It is a school.”

“A school,” says I, “and what might that be?”

“A place where children grow and learn.”

“Children,” says I, “and what are they?”

“They are little people.”

“People,” says I, “what is people?”

“I am the singular form of people - person.”

“Ahh! That explains it all. You went to school too, I presume?”

“Yes, when I was a child.”

“Good gracious! There are so many childs!”

“Yes, there are many, and they must all learn to be useful grown-up people.”

“Oh, I see! When they grown-up they become people.”

“No! You don’t see at all! They are people now, but they are only useful when they are older.”

“This useful you speak of”

“Help!”

“So sorry, what is the saying oh, yes - goodbye!”

Eileen McGrath

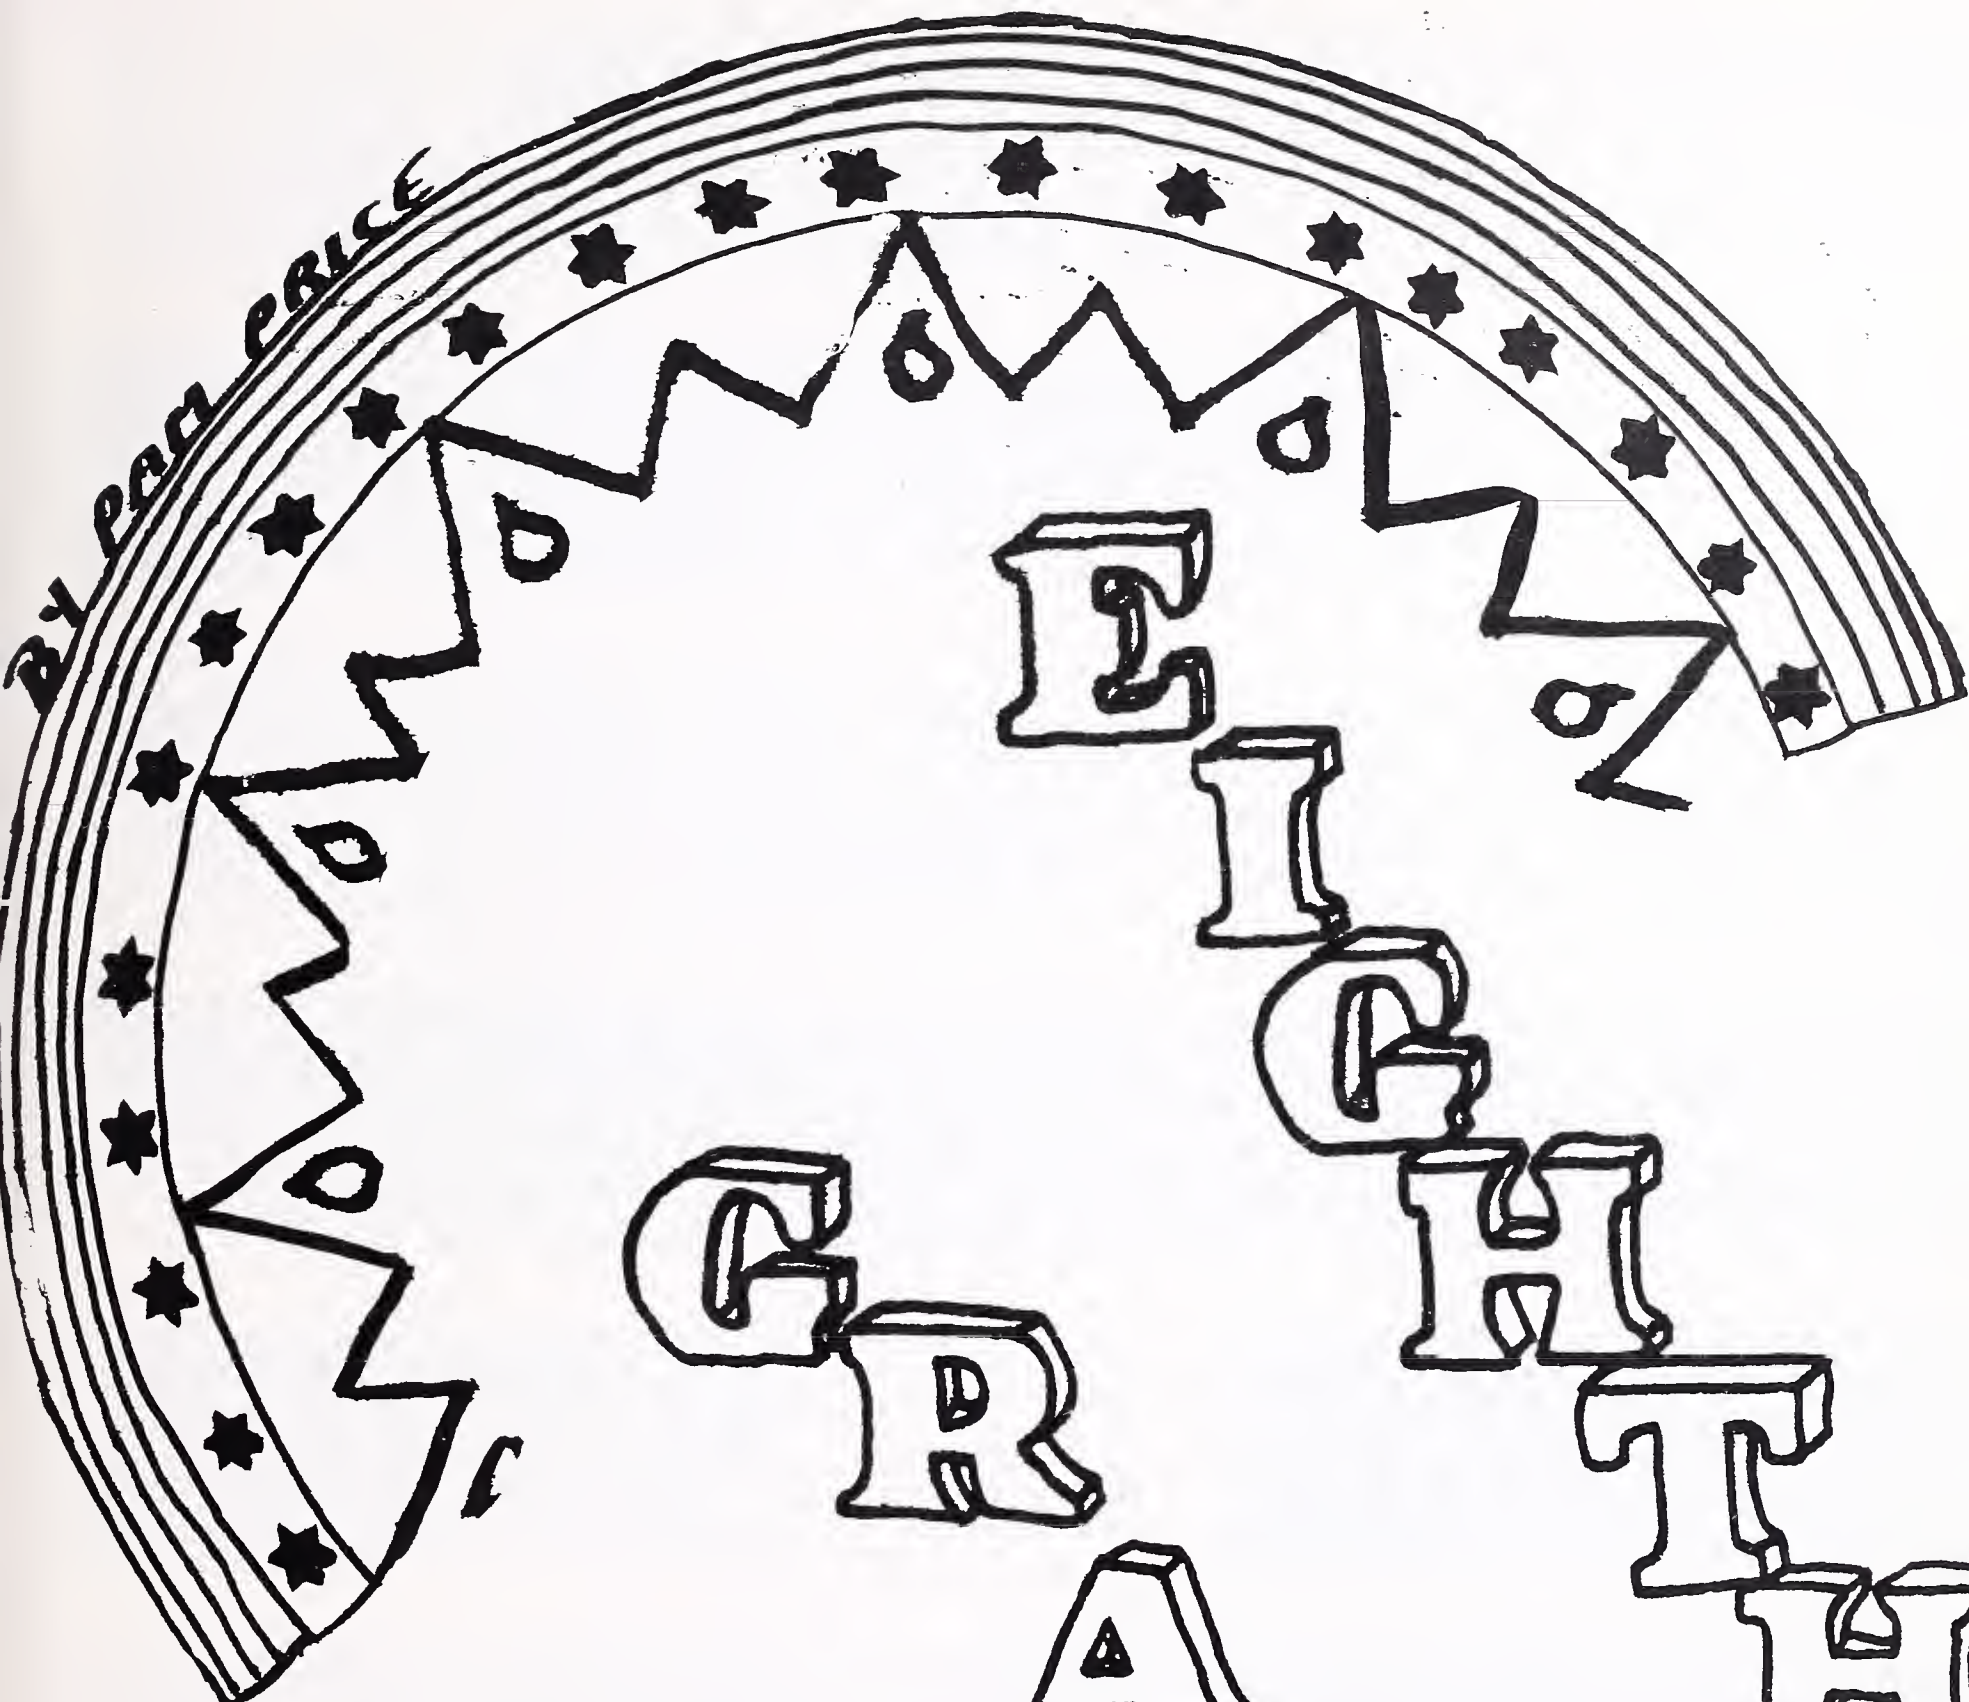

“If I go, so do you!”

“You Tarzan, me gorilla!”

King has become one of the main parts of my life. I'll spend almost one quarter of my life going to school, and King, at present, is that portion of my life. I go to school to learn, and with the knowledge I receive from King, I work to better my mind and body. Though I respect King for its strive to teach students, there are some aspects of King that displease me. I resent the way some teachers run their classes, but I agree with others. I think King has not put in a full effort to please its students, though things have been, and are being done. In King I have gone through many changes that have bettered me, and probably worsened me, but in King I have always felt a certain satisfaction as I finish one semester and prepare for the next.

Martini & Rossi on the rocks

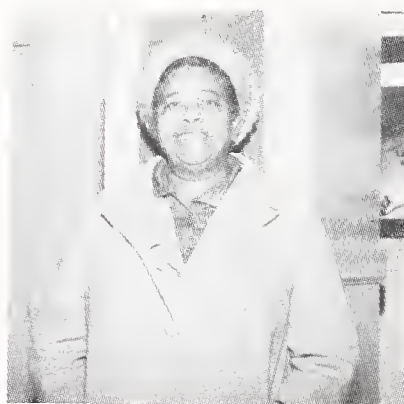

"Well, be that way, then!"

"Aren't we studiosus!"

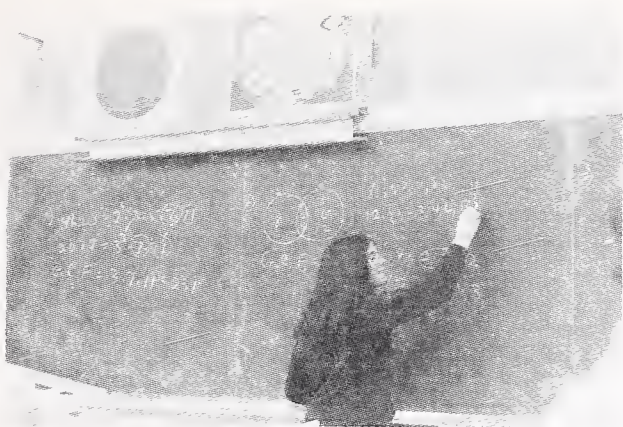

"Thank God it's Friday!"

"All right, who put the rubber cement on this pillar?!"

"Dirty old men need love, too!"

"In case you don't realize, I'm a great mathematician."

"I'm singing in the shade."

"I asked, 'Are you deaf?' "

"Help!"

"Don't take the picture yet!"

"This is Howard Cosell at ringside."

"Hey! You got peanut butter on my chocolate!"

"He went thataway!"

The teachers, their minds whirring with the wisdom Plato and Aristotle spoke beneath the olive trees of Ancient Greece, speak with such sagacity that mankind marvels as to how they come to know such incredible secrets. The students, drinking knowledge as a fish drinks water, grow daily with each bit they acquire, then wonder ever after how they have learned so much. They will one day become kings and queens, sages and philosophers of the greatest intellect. The athletes go on to win honor on the Olympic fields, taking medal after medal on the never-ending stairway to triumph. And so the heart of King glows with the power of the universe and the wisdom of the worlds.

Charles Browning

Screams of joy and pain echo
Through the halls, out the door.
Never to return
In quite the same way.

There once was a baby who lay
By his twin and these words he did say,
"I hear from our mother
That you are my brother
Why don't we switch places today?"

So they changed all their things as they lay
Mother came, and she took them away
And not once did she see
That they weren't as should be
So they're backwards right up to this day!

There once was a young pair of twins
Who grumbled when not in the wins
And when trouble did bubble
The bubble was double
And they engaged in two times the sins.
